Listing of Claims:

1-20. (Cancelled)

21. (NEW) A combination label and document holder structure for shipping containers or the like, comprising:

- a sheet of printable material;
  - a non-opaque printable release liner covering a portion of said sheet, said release liner carrying a message on the outside thereof;
  - a layer of adhesive bonding said release liner to said sheet;
  - a first die cut through only said sheet and adhesive layer, said first die cut defining an adhesive-backed label in said sheet; and
  - a second die cut through only said release liner outwardly of said first die cut, said second die cut defining in said release liner a frame area around a window area;
- so that removal of said release liner in said frame area exposes said adhesive layer in only said frame area, and that removal of said adhesive-backed label exposes an adhesive-free window area in which said message can be seen through said non-opaque release liner.

22. (New) In combination with a shipping container, the structure of Claim 21 in which said frame area is so shaped and dimensioned that when a document is placed between said release liner and the surface of said container while said structure is applied against said surface, said document will be sealed against said container but will not adhere to said container nor to said release liner.

23. (New) The structure of Claim 21, wherein a line of weakness is formed in said sheet adjacent said portion of said sheet, and said portion of said sheet is separable at said line of weakness from the remainder of said sheet.

24. (New) The structure of Claim 21, wherein a line of weakness is formed in said sheet adjacent said portion of said sheet, and said portion of said sheet is separable at said line of weakness from the remainder of said sheet.
